#1000-2019-02-11Rawlings-Blake's former law firm makes loan to city agency Baltimore Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake's former law firm stepped into City Hall more than a year before her brother was elected to the office he would occupy until January 2013. The law firm, RSM Cooper & Lybrand, made a $75,000 loan last year to the city's Office of Tourism, Strategic Initiatives and Economic Development, which coordinates programs and projects with businesses to develop the city as an international travel destination. RSM Cooper & Lybrand spokeswoman Megan Jackson said her firm made the loan to the agency to help pay for the Baltimore Global Trade Conference because it provides services that help promote tourism and economic development in the city. The legal services are needed to help businesses, she said. "We don't get a lot of requests for non-legal-related services, so for us it was just an opportunity to lend a hand to an agency that was helping promote Baltimore and make things easier for businesses," Jackson said. The loan was made by RSM Cooper & Lybrand, where Attorney Robert M. Lybrand and Chief Operating Officer Michael A. Bowers were partners. Jackson said the partners had nothing to do with the loan. RSM Cooper & Lybrand has made a
