Sunday, September 26, 2008 Over the past few months, I've begun to write about some of my favorite and best Java 2D Libraries, recently I've started a new Blog that discusses the output of these libraries, here are some of my recent posts. "Programming artists a manual for Java 2D" is a great article that goes over the basics of Java 2D - how Java 2D manages the viewports, coordinate systems, graphics paths, clipping paths, groups and layers and how to use them. This article is based on Oracle's Java 2D graphics specification. Tuesday, September 14, 2008 I have noticed a few open source tools for doing Raster to vector conversion (or Raster to Raster), and I would like to share with you my tools and my two most used ones. I generally create raster images from vectors for web purposes. Therefore, I really need tools to convert raster images to vectors, so that I don't have to create them every time. For this purpose, I have created quite a few raster to vector tools, the best one I have found so far is PTconverter.PTConverter by Phil Burnett. The tool is open source and it is simple to use. Just need to convert a bitmap image to PostScript and then save it. But the best part is that the tool takes care of rendering the shadows and bevels into the converted vector, if you have these effects in your image, then they will be there in the converted PS vector. PTconverter lets you select the desired resolution, and the tool will automatically scale the picture. You can also set the Raster to Vector and Vector to Raster options, which can be found under Raster Options and Vector Options. You can aa67ecbc25

With the recent surge in popularity of LED lighting, a need has arisen to provide a cost effective and efficient means to retrofit existing incandescent light fixtures with LED technology. One of the most efficient solutions to this problem is to replace all incandescent lighting fixtures with LED fixtures in new construction. However, this is not a cost effective means of upgrading existing low-energy retrofit lighting systems to LED technology. The concept of replacing a complete light fixture involves the removal and replacement of all of the components in a lamp fixture. Often, the fixture is mounted to the ceiling and/or wall surface with multiple fasteners that require the removal of the mounting bracket and reinstallation of the bracket with new attachment hardware. Further complicating this process are the needs to check and apply the correct amount of torque to the attachment nuts during installation. In addition, during the exchange of the light fixture, all of the lamps within the fixture must be removed. Each of these fixtures, lamps, and bolts must be re-installed into a new fixture. Lamp socket or "lampholder" assemblies commonly use a combination of mated metal and plastic parts, as illustrated in FIG. 1. In this assembly, the lampholder part 100 is secured to a threaded nut 102 with a joint 106, which is trapped by a washer 104 and a lock nut 108. Each of these parts can be stripped off of the light fixture once a bolt has been removed. An advantage of this is that lampholders of various sizes can be interchanged by replacing the part with the correct size, but there are many disadvantages as well. These parts are made of multiple parts that are labor intensive and time consuming to assemble and/or disassemble. Each of the components must be assembled and then secured to the part that is later removed, which is time consuming and adds to the overall costs. Further, each of the components must be properly sized to allow for the most efficient use of the space in the fixture. A need has arisen for a more efficient and cost effective means to retrofit existing incandescent light fixtures with LED technology. In addition, there is a need for a means to easily
