The present invention relates to a method for mounting a component of a vapor-permeable wall on a structure, a structure which includes the component and to the component mounted on the structure. Constructional details of enclosures such as workshops, distribution booths, factory buildings, garment finishing facilities, buildings with paper recycling machinery and the like require a wall structure made gas-impermeable. Such walls are usually composed of several layers or parts, in which the individual layers or parts are mated on a construction site. After the walls have been constructed, add-on components, such as soundproofing mats and soundproofing panels can be added to them. The manufacture and construction of the individual wall layers or parts usually takes place at remote locations separated by distances of several km. Often, these components are integrated into the manufacturing and planning process of the building itself, e.g. in the fabrication of carpets and others, but in some cases the components are not manufactured or installed until the construction of the walls is finished. This often means that the walls cannot be tested and/or certified with regard to their acoustic tightness until all components have been installed. This is time-consuming and costly. There are several different methods known for constructing walls,

The NRA in January launched a political-advertising campaign, including broadcast TV ads in New Hampshire and Iowa, slamming the Obama administration's efforts to regulate the sale of firearms. The ads feature a home burglary in New Hampshire that ended with the video of a surprised homeowner armed with a gun. "You already have one - you can keep it if you want," the ad says in a voice-over. "And you know what? The president wants to take your gun." The NRA spent $4.3 million on issue ads in the 2012 presidential cycle, according to the Center for Responsive Politics. The organization has not indicated how much it is planning to spend in this campaign, and most of its advertising spend went to support the 2012 presidential candidates. The NRA has previously said it plans to spend $20 million on issue ads, but has not disclosed this amount. The NRA spent $6.1 million on federal elections in 2012, which works out to about $222,000 per candidate, or 25 percent of its federal election spending, according to OpenSecrets.org. In 2008, the NRA spent $4.8 million in federal elections, or about $220,000 per candidate. A Washington Post-ABC News poll in January found that 35 percent of Americans disapprove of how the NRA is handling its political-advocacy role, while 52 percent approve. The poll also found that 68 percent disapprove of the NRA spending in federal elections, while 32 percent approve. The NRA has faced accusations of attempting to sway presidential and Senate races with its messaging, and allegations that the organization helped elect political candidates who take stands on gun rights. In one instance, the Washington Post reported that the NRA's political-communications director, Chris Cox, met in 2008 with some campaign staffers for then-Sen. Barack
